Mindgrub Technologies Opens New Meetup Location

Mindgrub opens "The Vault," a place for technologists and innovators to gather and share ideas.

Baltimore, MD -- On January 31, Mindgrub Technologies held its first Baltimore Washington Tech Meetup of the year at their headquarters.

Mindgrub Technologies has grown to over 30 employees to become one of Baltimore's premier mobile app development shops. In mid-2011, the company re-located to a former bank building with a basement space that serves as a place where Mindgrub can open its doors to the community and serve as an incubator for technology. Mindgrub has nicknamed the space "The Vault," because the vault from the original bank is still present.

In this inaugural event in The Vault, Mindgrub CEO and President Todd Marks delivered his thirty-minute presentation on "Voice Recognition vs. Augmented Reality". The room was filled with 30 guests, from the tech savvy, to web developers and local business owners. The presentation took us from the Star Trek days to our current state, where augmented reality exists in eyewear.

Marks, who has been hosting casual gatherings for over two years, will continue to have the monthly meetings at the office. "Our meetups are designed to allow local entrepreneurs and tech enthusiasts to meet in a casual setting, network and learn from one another. We are encouraged by the support from the local community. Even though we are players in the web and mobile space, Mindgrub still loves to meet people face to face," says Marks.
